【講義概要】

This talk considers a recently discovered Sanskrit dhāraṇī spell text from around the 5th century - a rare scripture with a focus on the practice of thaumaturgic weather control for successful agriculture by overpowering mythical Nāgas. The Vajratuṇḍasamaya or Vajra Beak Vow, a text of six chapters, presents the vidyādhara spell-master as the ritualist using maṇḍ alas, mudrās and and other techniques along with the authority of Garuḍa to gain mastery over these serpentine beings held responsible for rainfall. By subjugating the Nāgas, favourable weather and good crops are guaranteed for the region. With the completion of a critical edition and annotated translation based on four Nepalese witnesses various aspects of this tradition will be discussed including wider contexts.
